Make Home Pleasant.

We always suspect errors in domestic training, when we find children preferring all other places to home. Parents should throw around the home circle a magnetism to be found nowhere else. A pleasant and loved home is one of the most powerful restraints from vice, and keeps alive within the heart pure thoughts and generous aspirations. We find some good thoughts on this point in Life Illustrated:

"A child may as easily be led to associate pleasure with home ideas as to think of it in connection with the home of his playmates. Certainly, if allowed to do so, he can as readily connect happiness with parents, brothers, and sisters, as with those of other kin. And the child will do so unless happiness and pleasure, when he calls for them under the parental roof, respond 'Not at home.' All home pictures should be bright ones. The domestic hearth should be clean and joyous."

"If home life is well ordered, the children baving, according to age, work-time, play-time, books, games, and household sympathies, they will love home, and find pleasure there."

"Give the little ones states and pencils, and encourage their attempts to make pictures. Drawing will amuse them who noisy phys have lost their zest, or are unseasonable; and the art will be useful to them in all the business of after life. Have them read to each other stories and paragraphs of your selection, and save the funny things and the pleasant ones you see in the papers and books, to read to all at your leisure. You cannot imagine how much it will please them, and how it will bind them to you. But choose well for them, for the impression made on their minds will last with the hills and mountains. Have them sing together, and sing with them, teaching them songs and hymns. Let them sing all day like the birds at all proper times. Have them mutually interested in the same things, amusements, and occupations; having specified times for each so that their habits will be orderly. Let them work together—knitting and sewing—both boys and girls. They enjoy it equally unless the boys are taught that it is unladylike to understand girls' work. They should know how to do it, and practically, too, as there they may avoid much discomfort in future life. Let them work together in the garden—boys and girls—both need out-of-door work. Together let them enjoy their games, riddles, etc., all their plays, books, and work, while the parents' eyes direct and sympathize, and their voices blend in loving accord. Have the children do some little things, daily, for your personal comfort; let them see that it gives you pleasure, and that you depend on them for the service. This will attach them to you more strongly; and if they feel responsibility, even in matters of themselves trivial, and are sure of your sympathy, their affections and joys will cluster around the home hearth."

"Children like to be useful—it makes them happy. So give them work time as well as play-time. But in any case, and in all cases give them sympathy. Express love for them."

More than building showy mansions. More than dress and fine array. More than money, wealth, and ease. More than station, power, and sway. Make your home both neat and tasteful, bright and pleasant, always fair. Where each heart shall rest contented, grateful for each beauty there.

More than lofty, swelling tides; More than fashion, fad, and glare. More than money, gilded hours; More than thought can well compare. Make your home a true and lasting, bright and pleasant, always fair. Where each heart shall rest contented, grateful for each beauty there.
